You've successfully reported this review. We get a closer look at the "difficult" Jess.

I always sense that they must have a germ of reality to them - something or so met Her mother commits suicide; her crude, abusive father is regularly beat up by loan sharks; Juliette herself submits to her boyfriend's sadistic behavior and earns a reputation as a slut. Anthony's erstwhile friend Jay Berkowitz takes Juliette on an after-hours tour of the West Orange zoo. In the case of the Orthodox Jew and the Irish devout Catholic, neither of those religions allow for adultery, either, do they? Easy to understand why people are turned off by them, isn't it? I still puzzle over some of the facts in the book: did they happen? There are a lot of parallels but he managed to keep the plots and details so completely separate.
